Written for case managers working in health and human services, this practical guide addresses the need for more progressive and compassionate ways of working with others. Introducing innovative strategies for working with people that challenge the status quo, the book reconsiders old forms of social casework in favour of empowerment approaches that incorporate individual systemic advocacy. Patricia Spindel covers the history of case management, traditional approaches and their critiques, barriers to an empowerment approach, the ethical issues of labelling, stereotyping, stigmatization and pathologizing, and key empowerment philosophies and the research that supports them.

This guide provides concrete methods that will help readers put principles of empowerment philosophy into practice. With practical case studies and questions for reflection featured throughout the chapters, it is well suited for human services, social services, and social work programs in colleges and universities in Canada. FEATURES

- offers a practical "how to" for developing an empowerment plan and deals with common issues in practice, such as projection, countertransference, and transference
- includes core concepts of empowerment and methodology for building individual and community capacity and competence
- provides students with case studies from the field and questions to encourage reflection

Reviews

"The empowerment approach is the book's greatest strength. I found the text engaging with the examples and easy to read but informative—it provides the reader with practical skills and techniques to apply to their role as case manager. Case management is Euro-centric and often a paternalistic way of social control. The critical dialogue and discussion in this text is important for professionals to engage in. I would venture to say that this text should be required reading for any professional in case management and not just students in a classroom."

—Marlene Stewart, Professor and Program Coordinator, Social Service Worker Program, Sheridan College

"This text challenges us to take traditional orientations of case management and interrogate their implications for people who use health and community services. Coming from a perspective that embraces empowerment and attunement with people, this text steadily focuses our attention back to humanizing services by centring the voices of clients, patients, and service users. One thing missing in Canada is exactly this sort of context-specific, concrete textbook that helps human service workers to actually practice the skills around case management."

—Debashis Dutta, Faculty, Bachelor of Community & Criminal Justice Program, Conestoga College, and Lecturer, School of Social Work, University of Waterloo
